About Vince Giuliano

I believe a technique called Intentional Reality Creation has been at the heart of most basic personal and professional successes I have enjoyed in my long life. That is what I expect our forthcoming online conversation to be about. I am a longevity science researcher.

My blog www.agingsciences.com is visited daily by more than 3,500 people, has over 65,000 registered subscribers, and I estimate is followed by over 200,000 people worldwide. Here is the short bio on my website:

“Being a follower, connoisseur, and interpreter of longevity research is my latest career. I have been at this part-time for well over a decade, and in 2007 this became my mainline activity. In earlier reincarnations of my career. I was founding Dean of a graduate school and a University Professor at the State University of New York, a senior consultant working in a variety of fields at Arthur D. Little, Inc., Chief Scientist and COO of Mirror Systems, a software company, and an international Internet consultant. I got off the ground with one of the earliest PhD's from Harvard in a field later to become known as computer science. Because there was no academic field of computer science at the time, to get through I had to qualify myself in hard sciences, so my studies focused heavily on quantum physics. In various ways I contributed to the Computer Revolution starting in the 1950s and the Internet Revolution starting in the late 1980s. I am now engaged in doing the same for The Longevity Revolution.

I have published something like 200 books and papers as well as over 450 substantive entries in my blog, and have enjoyed various periods of notoriety. If you do a Google search on Vincent E. Giuliano, most if not all of the entries on the first several pages that come up will be ones relating to me.

Event Details

I expect we will spend our online time together with a short introductory presentation followed by an open-ended conversation. The presentation will feature a non-technical explanation of what IRC is, how it works, and how its existence is compatible with scientific knowledge, and to what my own contribution to IRC is, given the long history of practice it enjoys.

If you want to prepare for the conversation, you can read my recent online post, "What's Already Done isn't Necessarily Done Yet." And, if you want in-depth background, you can read my comprehensive online treatise on the subject, "On Being and Creation."

About intention-based reality creation

Repeatedly and with great consistency, during most of my life, I have somehow managed to create my own realities, key aspects of the world I live in. I have done this not just through hard work but also through the power of focused intention.

The process has led me to believe that we live in worlds of our own creation based on our beliefs and intentions. I call the process Intentional Reality Creation (IRC). IRC often seems to work through completely mystical means.

Event Details (ctd)

In the wake of my focused intention, events, and circumstances completely beyond my control somehow seem to conspire to create what I deeply want. It also works to create things against great odds to the contrary. Yet, after the fact, there appears to be a complete causal chain for the appearance of the creation, wiping away any element of mystery. What is going on?

The idea of IRC is far from new; intention-based reality creation has long been practiced by Buddhist monks and a version of it is central to ancient Jainism. In all of the spiritual traditions embodying the concept of karma, intent plays a central and definitive role. The practice of IRC is probably as old as humankind. Today, practice of forms of IRC is advocated by a diverse collection of new age philosophers like Wayne Dyed, Werner Erhard, Harry Palmer, Lynne McTaggart, and many psychics. Dan Brown's book The Lost Symbol has characters that practice IRC.

My own contribution, developed over a 50 year period, has been in showing that IRC is not necessarily just a mystical or spiritual process – it is completely compatible and consistent with bedrock theories in science that are over 80 years old. What is new here and in my writings is a decent explanation compatible with science of how it works, making IRC no more mysterious than quantum mechanics. In fact, I have shown how three of the main interpretational frameworks for quantum mechanics also apply directly for interpreting how IRC works.
