About Joseph Wilmot

Biographical Summary

Joseph works as a supervisor, trainer, coach, mediator and consultant. From frontline delivery to management, he has experience of working in the private and 3rd sector, and many years working for a local authority in Youth Services, Education and Family Services. During this time, Joseph was part of a specialist multi-disciplinary team working with children at risk of entering care. He developed a talent for helping people make positive changes in their lives and working effectively in complex multi-agency settings.

As a supervisor, Joseph has experience with individuals, groups and teams. He has worked with a varied array of people and organisations including employees from several London boroughs, Youth Services, the NHS and independent charities. Joseph has an excellent knowledge of the Seven-Eyed Supervision Model, as he currently delivers training in it across the country and works with its creators. He is a tutor for the Centre for Supervision and Team Development (CSTD).

Authority and Authenticity - with Joseph Wilmot

Recently, in my own supervision, my supervisor talked about the 'pull of the organisation'. We were discussing my work with an organisation and reflecting on the different roles, responsibilities, relationships and how authentic I felt the interactions and interventions were. I was interested in the sense of my own integrity and that of my clients and their organisation as we worked together. I realised that authority had a major role in this work. The title of CSTD London's 2nd Annual Conference on Monday 11 July is 'You are your Accreditation - Stepping into your own Authority'.

With this in mind, I want to explore authority within the wider context of our work. John and I will invite attendees, through the chat room, to explore how we stay in relationship and interact with authority and authenticity within the frameworks of our practice. What helps and hinders this? What experiences and insights have been important along the way?
