About Alison Hodge

I am an accredited Executive Coach at Master Practitioner level with EMCC and an accredited Executive Coaching Supervisor with APECS. Working globally as a coaching supervisor with individuals and groups of both internal and external executive coaches, I seek to co-create working agreements to explore their practice, their client work and their ongoing professional wellbeing.

I am a member of faculty and supervise supervisors-in-training at CSA (Coaching Supervision Academy). I completed my DProf in Coaching Supervision at Middlesex University in 2014. I am particularly interested in the relational phenomena that arise in supervision and how this can inform the supervisee about their own process with their client relationships as well as what may be occurring in their individual and organizational client systems. # Event Details

In supervision, our supervisees choose what they bring to explore and discuss. Either consciously or unconsciously they select and edit what they share in supervision for a variety of reasons. Accepting this, the way in which the supervisee engages with us as supervisor may also reflect what is happening in the overall client system.

In this dialogue we will explore how we use what is happening in our supervision relationship and the impact we have on each other to inform what may be happening between the supervisee and their client and the system in which the work is taking place.
